Announcing the support at a news conference at the Ontario Federation of Labour's head office in Toronto, Ford said there is a need for a higher wage to match the changing economy. "I want to make sure that every worker is able to earn a decent living. The first step towards that is getting to a $15 minimum wage. We're going to get there as fast as we can," he said. The minimum wage will rise to $14 on Jan. 1, and increase to $15 by Jan. 1, 2019. "I want to make sure that no one is working 40 hours a week or more for an employer and just having to scrape by," he said.

Conservative Leader Doug Ford says he has full confidence in Ontario's ability to meet these aggressive timelines for implementing a $15 per hour minimum wage for workers in the province. 1:16 Ford's comments come as the Wynne government attempts to deal with widespread criticism of the wage hike, which is now being imposed across the province — except for in Toronto and some other cities — in accordance with new legislation that just took effect on Jan. 1. An online petition opposing the wage hike, spearheaded by a former Liberal cabinet minister, has gathered more than 40,000 signatures. "I have full confidence that we're going to get there," Ford said of the implementation of the new $15 per hour minimum wage. "It's going to be a challenge, but I'm sure that we can meet these timelines." Ontario's new minimum wage rises to $14 from the previous rate of $11.40 on Jan. 1, and will increase to $15 by Jan. 1, 2019. The new minimum wage also will apply to some farm workers. (Canadian Press) The previous Liberal government enacted the new minimum wage law, passed in 2015, but the Wynne government has since delayed its implementation. The Liberals had argued that having the new wage level imposed on businesses across the province was more efficient. "We did all we could. 82157476af
